

Acupuncture Therapy

Acupuncture Therapy is based on the theory, that electrical energy is transmitted through the body via certain channels. If that flow of energy or “chi” is blocked, the result is an imbalance that causes pain, discomfort and disease. By stimulating certain points on the body, you can unblock the flow of energy allowing the body to heal.

Research shows that acupuncture points are areas of high electrical conductivity. The energy generated in the stimulated areas is transmitted through layers of connective tissue, which surrounds the muscles and internal organs.

Acupuncture has been used successfully for years, to treat arthritis respiratory problems, allergies, feline asthma, gastrointestinal problems and liver disease.

Disclaimer: these practices don't take the place of veterinary care.